

Chelsea Fordyce:

- ▶ Having grown up with my grandma and her working within the mental health sector, I notice I also had a natural interest in how the brain works in relation to how we behave and criminology, so during the covid pandemic and shortly after having my little boy I decided to do an Open University Degree in Forensic Psychology, I am still part way through and taking a year or so out to focus on my career and hope to go back and finish my degree in the not so distant future Since 2010 I have been volunteering as a Teaching Assistant at One Foundation Saturday School.
- ▶ I have had several fantastic volunteering charitable support worker roles within London and Hertfordshire, all working with children and adults with mental health and learning disabilities and the siblings of those who use the charities, helping to run Arts, Crafts, Music and Willow weaving workshops for the service users
- ▶ I am now the Administrator for the Nuffield Research programme with STEMPOINT and could not imagine being anywhere else, the gratification in supporting student's to be open minded to the world of STEM and the opportunities it has to offer is truly wonderful. I feel extremely lucky to be part of such an amazing organisation and work alongside such inspiring colleagues
